'Zoom face' is affecting more women than ever before. Rather than take drastic action, meet the 'glow-cedures' and high-grade skincare products that are so good, surgeons don't want you to know about them

Words by FIONA EMBLETON

Our dark circles aren't fooling anyone. Nor, it seems, are those nose-to-mouth indents, no matter how artfully we angle the laptop. In the age of endless video calls, there's been a pivotal change in how we look at our faces. And tellingly, 'Zoom face' – where scrutinising yourself on screen can reveal dull-looking skin or the first sign of an angry crease – has entered our lexicon. ➤
